Executive Summary

This study explores the concept of "femvertising," which refers to the use of feminist messages and themes in advertising to promote gender equality and women's empowerment. The study focuses on selected TV ads that use femvertising to promote their products and services. The research methodology used in this study is qualitative, involving the analysis of the content of the selected TV ads, as well as interviews with a sample of women who have viewed the ads. The results of the study suggest that femvertising can be an effective strategy for promoting products and services while also promoting women's empowerment. The selected ads that use femvertising were found to be effective in promoting positive attitudes towards women, challenging gender stereotypes, and encouraging women to pursue their goals and aspirations. However, the study also highlights some limitations and challenges associated with femvertising.

CHAPTER I

1.1 INTRODUCTION

Advertisements are inevitably used for social communication. It is a powerful force used by the advertising people to persuade, manipulate, and shape behavior of the consumers. To goad the customers to buy the product, the advertisers attempt to adopt different strategies and to depict pretty women in the ad is one of them. Sometimes the advertisers do not bother if the product really needs to have women as endorser. Thus, the images of woman in advertising have been a matter of debate from considerable time. With passage of time the portrayal of women in advertisements has undergone a great revolution according to the changing position and responsibility of women in the society. Earlier women's destiny was only limit her role as mother and wife and men were considered as the main consumer of the family. In the same way both were also portrayed in the media, the former in relationship role and as submissive whereas the later as the bread earner of the family, aggressive and adventurous. During last couple of decades due to rapid changes in market scenario there is a great shift in the responsibility assigned to women and how she is placed in the society. The one who was totally dependent on men has turned into the liberated women of 21st Century either with independent salary or with views of her own. Woman confined to the household, works now and is seen as the independent career woman of today. Their role has metamorphosed from domestic managers to prime purchasers, who take the decision about the majority purchases for the family. Thus, now they are the main targets of the marketers and increasingly portrayed in variety of ads. Ads with female empowerment themes have been applauded for challenging gender stereotypes in the media and raising awareness about issues facing females of all ages while empowering women and young girls. Femvertising is bringing women front and center and helping to even the representation score. In addition to ensuring women are represented, femvertising seeks to celebrate women and showcase them in authentic scenarios— often going against traditional female gender stereotypes. The present study is undertaken to analyze the concept of femvertising. For this, the ads of Hamam, Vanitha and Vim which focus on women empowerment are selected and are examined to know what impact these ads create among the consumers. The ads are selected based on their popularity and viewership. The study also seeks to understand the message delivered by these selected Indian TV ads and the factors which empower women through these ads.

1.2 REVIEW OF LITERATURE

1. Victoria E Drake (2017), The study seeks to evaluate the influence of female empowerment messaging in advertising targeted to women by measuring the differences in self-reported ad opinions, brand favorability, and purchase intentions that result from exposure to a femvertising compared to a traditional, non femvertising advertisement for the same brand. Furthermore, this study will examine the strength of the emotional connection to the brand resulting from femvertising, and how exposure impacts millennial women 's perceptions of how their gender is portrayed in advertising.
2. Maria Pilar Rodriguez Perez, Miren Gutierrez (2017) This article argues that companies producing these female-empowering advertisements show different degrees of commitment to equality, but in certain cases, they intend to manipulate users for bigger profits with faux activism. However, feminist strategies in advertising have the potential to disrupt gender norms, and users have the capacity to express dissatisfaction with such tactics.
3. Sara Champlin, Yvette Sterbenk, Kasey Windels, Maddison Poteet (2019) Through a qualitative analysis of advertisements that received an award for femvertising, this study sheds light on the differences in message themes between brands with high versus low brand-cause fit, specifically target audience brand cause fit, to further this literature and advertising practice. Five key messaging themes are elucidated among high-fit brands (overt femininity, fixing the self, being a girl is a hardship, actors on set, and let's talk about it) and four themes among low-fit brands (low femininity, breaking stereotypes, reminders that women and men do the same activities, and getting men on board); which shape how women are depicted, the overall brand message, and the overall social issue message. Indeed, fit should be considered beyond simple high/low congruence. Implications for advertising practitioners and researchers are discussed.

4. Francesca Sobande (2019) This paper aims to explore how and why ideas regarding intersectional approaches to feminism and Black activism are drawn on in marketing content related to the concept of being —woke (invested in addressing social injustices). It considers which subject positions are represented as part of this and what they reveal about contemporary issues concerning advertising, gender, race and activism. This study involves an interpretive and critical discursive analysis of so-called feminist advertising (—femvertising) and marketing examples that make use of Black social justice activist ideas.

5. Alexandra Rae Hunt (2017) This thesis explores the impact of femvertising on representations of women, its relation to and conversation with third wave feminism as a growing social movement, and its extension of a brand's dedication to corporate social responsibility. Feminist critical discourse analysis from a third wave perspective was used to conduct qualitative visual and textual analysis of three different femvertising campaigns: Dove's —Campaign for Real Beauty, Always' —Like a Girl campaign, and Pantene's —Shine Strong campaign.

6. Deepa Kapoor, Alka Munjal (2019) This study investigates the influence of self-consciousness and Need for Emotion on Attitude towards femvertising. It further sheds light on the effect of Attitude towards femvertising on forwarding intention of ad and purchase intention of the advertised brand. ANOVA was conducted to analyze the relationship between demographic profile of women respondents with their attitude towards femvertising, forwarding intention and purchase intention. Results show that individuals Private & Public self-consciousness and need for emotion influence their attitude towards femvertising. Positive attitude towards femvertising influence their forwarding intention of ad but does to lead to purchase intent. The findings revealed that intention to forward and purchase intention varies across different age groups.

7. Fei Teng, Junsheng Hu, Zhansheng Chen, Kai-Tak Poon, Yong Bai (2020) The present study draws on theories and prior research on corporate social responsibility (CSR) and gender attitudes (i.e., sexism) to understand young Chinese peoples' responses toward women-empowering advertising (i.e., femvertising). The experiments showed that messaging about women's empowerment in advertising can induce perceptions of CSR, thereby increasing favorable responses such as enhanced positive ad attitudes and increased purchase intentions toward the advertised products.
8. Chung-Kue Jennifer Hsu (2018) This paper aims to enhance consumer brand managers' understanding of the growing practice of femvertising, discussing factors that have contributed to its rise, how it differs from traditional portrayals of women and girls in advertising, potential benefits and criticisms of this advertising approach, and a list of ten themes that brands have recently used in femvertising. To femvertise effectively, marketers are recommended to build pro-female messages on their brand purpose and research insight, depict realistic images and lifestyles of women and girls, transcend gender divisions in representing females 'expanding roles and aspirations, and be authentic in practicing what they preach in femvertising.
9. Nikki Mamuric (2019) This paper looks at femvertising as it reflects a renewed interest in women's rights and role in society and what that means for brands and marketers. More than ever, women are seeking esteem from marketers showcasing real women to sell brands. Femvertising is also a champion of equality, leading the way for brands to take societal accountability in marketing to not only sell but also empower.
10. Fei Qiao, Ye Wang (2019) The purpose of this research is to decrypt the connotative and ideological meaning of beauty ideals, age, and marriage in the femvertising campaigns launched by mass cosmetic brands, through the lens of social semiotics. The study suggests that the lack of genuineness in advocating women's empowerment in femvertising launched by cosmetic brands is ultimately subject to the conservative, persistent and stereotypical traditions of gender roles in the Chinese society

11. Alan Abitbol, Miglena M Sternadori (2020) This purpose of this study was to investigate how consumers 'degree of rurality and preference for specific ad types are associated with their attitude toward femvertising (pro-female advertising). The findings of this study is that the more urban the respondents'location was, the more educated they were, leading to more support for gender equality but not a more positive attitude to femvertising. Liking of ads described as funny, || —with a messagel and —emotionall|| was associated with a more positive attitude toward femvertising.
12. Lindsey M Case (2019) This article explores the messages and design of print advertisements before and after this movement, evaluating the evolution of companies in their representation of and marketing to women. Comparing the typography, photography, and themes of communications content from the 1960s, 70s or 80s to ads published in the past five years provides a context for the way in which societal shifts influence brand positioning and consumer perception. Through a qualitative visual analysis, the study identifies key trends in femvertising, including a decline in product prominence, an increase in depictions of diversity, as well as an emphasis on the sentiment of strength across campaigns.
13. Samer Elhajjar (2021) The purpose of this paper is to offer a clear understanding of the use of femvertising in Lebanon and its effects on consumers in general. Lebanese people positively perceive the implication of women empowerment in advertisement. Gender, trust in ads, support of women 's rights and feminist self-identification, all have an impact on consumer behavior toward femvertising. However, the educational level and age do not affect the attitudes toward femvertising.
14. Alan Abitbol, Miglena Sternadori (2019) The goal of this study is to explore the effects of company—cause fit within the context of the CSR strategy of femvertising. The findings suggest that within a femvertising context, purchase intention is impacted by CSR associations and company—cause fit both directly and through loyalty. The findings clarify how company support of women-empowering causes can be an effective CSR strategy and how it fits with the current strategic communication literature.

15. Miglena Sternadori, Alan Abitbol (2019) The purpose of this paper is to explore consumers 'perceptions of femvertising in relation to their worldview. The findings suggest that women's rights supporters and self-identifying feminists seem highly receptive of femvertising. Taken together, the findings clarify how femvertising can be an effective strategy for marketers and how it fits within the current advertising literature.

16. Neema Varghese, Navin Kumar (2020) This article identifies the major factors leading to femvertising: (1) growing activism around the better representation of women in advertising;(2) brand activism and conscious capitalism;(3) the criticism of corporate and commodity feminism;(4) increasing awareness of gender stereotyping; (5) and increasing scrutiny by regulatory bodies on gender role representations in advertising. The study proposes that future studies in femvertising should address the remaining issues of lack of authenticity, dilution of feminist discourse, interconnection with social movements as well as linkages to increased representation of women in advertising, both to construct a full picture of the current state of femvertising and to understand its future configuration in a shifting social and ideological environment.

17. Rita Abreu Rodriguez (2016) This thesis proposes a critical study of the techniques and messages in femvertising through a comparative study of two ad campaigns as well as a content analysis of consumers response to the same. Results show that the way these campaigns are constructed have an impact in the way they are perceived by consumers, the way they relate to it and the conversations sparked around these campaigns using the hashtag.

18. Lisa Dahlbeck Jalakas (2016) This thesis explores the relationship between feminism and advertising from the individual woman's perspective. the results from this study suggest that audience reactions towards this phenomenon cannot be easily generalized. On the contrary, women extract different meanings from the advertisements, making it fit into their own individual context.

19. Stephanie A Pankiw, Barbara J Phillips, David E Williams (2020) This study aims to explore two questions: are luxury jewelry brands communicating CSR (including women's empowerment) in their advertising? And how should luxury jewelry brands communicate CSR messages in their advertising? The findings show that very few (3%) of print advertisements contain CSR messages, including femvertising and the theory presents four paths for brands to consider when promoting CSR practices, namely, ethical sourcing, cause-related marketing product, a signal of product care and quality and signal of an authentic relationship with the consumer.
20. Lorena Ronda, Garazi Azanza (2021) This article develops for the first time the concept of employer femvertising as a talent attraction tool companies can use to position themselves as employers committed to empowering women. The contributions in this article reveal the existence of employer femvertising in employer brand building and identify a taxonomy of 5 categories for this femvertising content: gender equality, female leadership, inclusive recruitment, female talent growth, and work-life balance.
21. Camila FrancSo Soler (2019) This study aimed to contribute to the current research on femvertising and to help shed light on the matter of how postfeminist female consumers engage with femvertising campaigns - and the potential for brands to invest in such advertising strategy. Findings indicate that postfeminist women do not discuss femvertising in depth but they do appreciate that companies are promoting empowering messages. They are, however, skeptical of corporate intentions and do not consider these campaigns feminist straight away. Additionally, it was observed that companies guilty of promoting Commodity Feminism were strongly disapproved.
22. Camilla Jacobson, Loubna Katalin Abdallah, Djenane Liasse, Elisabet Lund (2018) The purpose of this paper is to investigate how brand activism in advertisements (specifically femvertising in this case) affects male consumers' attitudes towards the brand behind the advertisement. The results of this paper indicate that men's attitude towards brand image can be either enhanced or abated, depending on the communication, authenticity and the inclusion of other both genders.

23. Namhyun Um (2020) this study will explore Korean college students' understanding of, attitude toward, and effects of femvertising through focus group interviews. Study results found that college students have low level of understanding on the concept of femvertising. However, they are somewhat familiar with contents of femvertising. Lastly, female participants suggest that femvertising, compared to traditional advertising, will enhance attitude toward ads and brand, and even have a positive impact on feminism. However, male participants suggest that femvertising may exacerbate the gender conflict between males and females which is called as 'misandry' or 'misogyny'.
24. SPillay (2020) The purpose of this study was to explore the influence of femvertising on attitude formation towards beauty brands among South African Generation Y and Generation Z female consumers. The findings were analyzed using deductive content analysis and indicated that femvertising does influence Generation Y and Generation Z women 's judgements about beauty advertisements, which in turn influence their beliefs, feelings and attitudes towards beauty advertisements and beauty brands.
25. Namhyun Um (2020) This study is designed to analyses female empowerment advertising campaigns so-called femvertising through a case analysis method. The objective of these femvertising campaigns is to change perspectives of the society on women and change men's perspective. This study also provides implications in regards with media usage strategy and advertising planning strategy.
26. Anjali Acharya, Lycke Ristimaki (2019) The purpose of the study is to explore consumers _Opinions about femvertising by fashion brands. Within this, the thesis seeks to explore how consumers feel about these advertisements and the outcome they perceive these to have. The findings demonstrated that the sampling mainly expressed positive responses to the femvertising due to its inclusive, diverse and empowering portrayals. Moreover, these advertisements were viewed as a harbinger of change within the fashion industry.

27. Hanna Pesonen (2020) The purpose of this study is to examine if, and in that case how feminism is being used as a marketing tool known as —femvertising‡ in the two firms; Labrosse and Ida Lamborn. These two firms were selected as both are specialized in products for young women and are known for their girl power advertisements. This study concludes that more information and material is needed in order to give a more conclusive answer, although it gives a brief insight into how femvertising works and how it can be identified.

28. MR Esmeijer (2020) The aim of this study was to examine to what extent body visualization and the way the body is conceptualized in advertising messages influences female consumer responses regarding attitude towards the ad, purchase intention, brand attitude and social endorsement. This study revealed that female consumers respond positively to femvertising advertisements with mixed models and it helps to lessen ad reactance. However, this study also showed that the use of a body functionality caption or a body appearance message makes no difference in consumer responses.

29. Imke van Deest, Bettina van der Stelt (2019) The purpose of this study is (1) to investigate the direct influence of femvertising on female consumers 'attitudes towards the ad, brand gender perception as well as purchase intention and (2) to test the indirect effect of femvertising through attitudes towards the ad and brand gender perception on purchase intention. The study proves that femvertising is a powerful communication strategy to attract female customers. Furthermore, the study provides evidence that gender stereotypes portrayed in advertisements are outdated and a trend towards a neutral brand gender perception emerges

30. Shan Wang (2018) This study selects and content analyses a sample of 40 femvertising videos, aims to explore what messages are delivered by the videos, and whether the campaigns break down the cliched ways in which media present women as the companies claim. The findings reveal that almost all the campaign videos deliver the message that girls/women are no less than boys/men. And most of the chosen videos show women in non-traditional roles, traits, and in non-skinny body types. However, most of the ads still present young and facial flawless women, which deserves a further discussion.

CHAPTER II

2.1 STATEMENT OF THE PROBLEM

Promotion is the key of any product or service. It keeps the customers informed about the product or service. Advertising is one of the important mediums that affects our daily lives. Ads have the power to affect the society and to change the cultures prevailing in the society. The way women are depicted in advertising has changed, reflecting the transformation that has simultaneously taken place in society. The study attempts to throw light on role of women in selected tv ads. Hence the aim of this study is to find out the influence of women empowerment ads among the consumers.

2.2 OBJECTIVES OF THE STUDY

- To know the concept of femvertising.
- To know the factors which depict women empowerment through ads.
- To understand the message delivered by selected Indian TV ads.
- To offer valuable suggestions and findings based as the study.

2.3 SCOPE OF THE STUDY

The study is confined to the female students of Commerce department. The role and portrayal of women in advertising can influence attitudes towards the evaluation of an ad.

2.4 USEFULNESS OF THE STUDY

It is beneficial for the society in large including men and women to have positive image of women as this can create healthy society and making the progress possible. The femvertising is a great attempt to bring the change, though it is with the intention to boost the sale but this will also empower the women. Thus, the concept of femvertising is gaining importance nowadays. This study will reveal the influence of femvertising ads among the consumers.

2.5 RESEARCH METHODOLOGY

Research methodology is a process used to collect information and data for the purpose of making decisions. The methodology may include publication research, interviews, surveys, and other research techniques

2.6 LIMITATIONS OF THE STUDY

- Respondents bias towards the questions.
- The study is conducted within limited time.
- Lack of face-to-face interaction with respondents.
- Low level of accuracy because it depends on the respondent 's response.

2.7 USE OF PRIMARY AND SECONDARY DATA

2.2.1 PRIMARY DATA

Primary data is information that you collect specifically for the purpose of your research project by way of preparing a questionnaire. Data observed or collected from first-hand experience.

2.2.2 SECONDARY DATA

Secondary data refers to data which is collected by someone who is someone other than the user. Common sources of secondary data for social science include censuses, information collected by government departments, organizational records and data that was originally collected for other research purposes.

CHAPTER III

3.1 INTERPRETATION OF DATA

TABLE NO: 3.1.1 - GENDER OF RESPONDENTS.

S.no	Gender	No. of respondents	Percentage (%)
1	Male	67	55.8
2	Female	53	44.2
3	Others	-	-
Total		120	100

Source: Primary Data.

INTERPRETATION

From the above table, I came to know that out of 120 respondents, majority of respondents come under the category of male (55.8%). Hence, male are the ones who mostly watch the ads.

It is inferred that majority of the (56%) of the respondents are male.

TABLE NO: 3.1.2 - OCCUPATION OF RESPONDENTS.

S.no	Occupation	No. of respondents	Percentage (%)
1	Government Employees	5	12.1
2	Private Employees	32	9.1
3	Student	48	74.3
4	Others	35	4.5
Total		120	100

Source: Primary Data.

INTERPRETATION

From these findings, I can conclude that the majority of respondents (48 out of 120) in this study were students (74.3%). Hence, students are mostly watch the ads compared to others.

It is inferred that majority of the (75%) of the respondents are from students.

CHART NO: 3.1.2 - OCCUPATION OF RESPONDENTS

OCCUPATION PERCENTAGE %

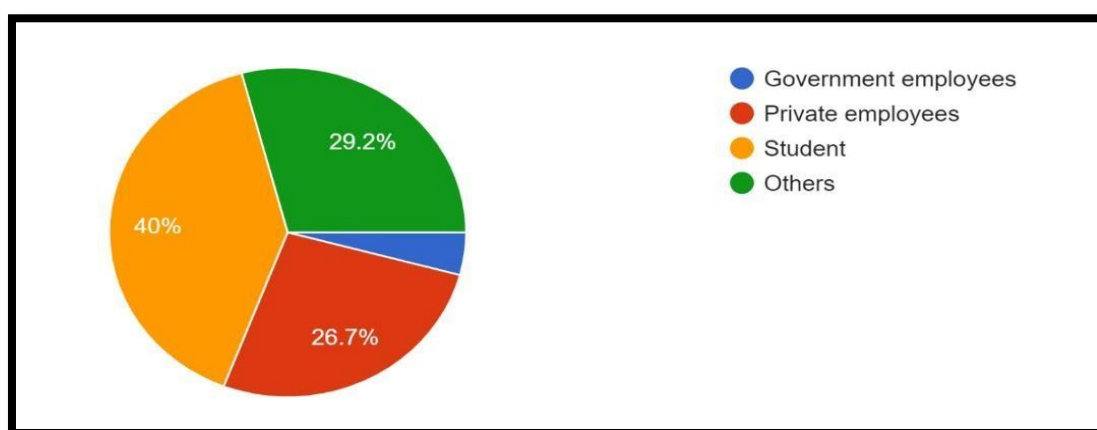

TABLE NO: 3.1.3 - INCOME CATEGORY OF RESPONDENTS.

S.no	Income	No. of respondents	Percentage (%)
1	High income	30	25
2	Medium income	74	61.7
3	Low income	16	13.3
Total		120	100

Source: Primary Data.

INTERPRETATION

It's clear that 61.7 per cent respondents are medium income. 25 per cent of respondents are high income. 13.3 percent of respondents are low income. It is concluded most of the respondents are medium income.

It is inferred that majority of the (61%) of the respondents are from medium income.

CHART NO : 3.1.3 - INCOME CATEGORY OF RESPONDENTS

INCOME CATEGORY PERCENTAGE %

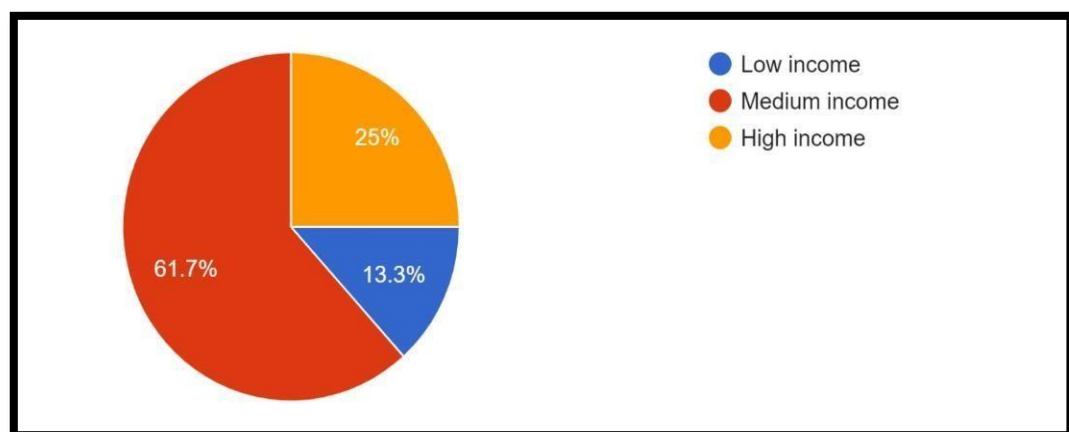

TABLE NO: 3.1.4 – FAMILY MONTHLY INCOME OF RESPONDENTS.

S.no	Family monthly income	No. of respondents	Percentage (%)
1	Less than 10K	11	9.2
2	10K-20K	15	12.5
3	20K-30K	43	35.8
4	30K and above	51	42.5
Total		120	100

Source: Primary Data.

INTERPRETATION

From the above table it represents that family monthly income of the respondents. 9.2 per cent of the respondents are less than 10K, 12.5 per cent of the respondents are 10K-20K, 35.8 percent of the respondents are 20K-30K, 42.5 per cent of the respondents are 30K and above. It is inferred that majority of the respondents are family monthly income 30K and above (42.5).

It is inferred that most of the (36%) of the respondents are from income 30k and above.

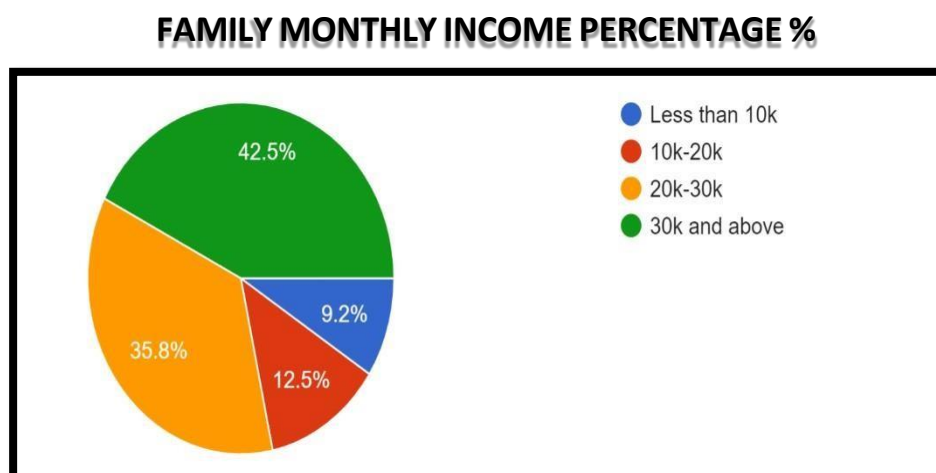

CHART NO: 3.1.4 – FAMILY MONTHLY INCOME OF RESPONDENTS.

TABLE NO: 3.1.5 – TYPES OF FAMILY OF RESPONDENTS.

S.no	Types of family	No. of respondents	Percentage (%)
1.	Nuclear family	67	55.8
2.	Joint family	53	44.2
Total		120	100

Source: Primary Data.

INTERPRETATION

In the study, I concluded by saying that the most of the family belongs to the nuclear family. 67 family in the category of the nuclear family, 53 family comes under the category of joint family.

It is inferred that majority of the (55%) of the respondents are from nuclear family.

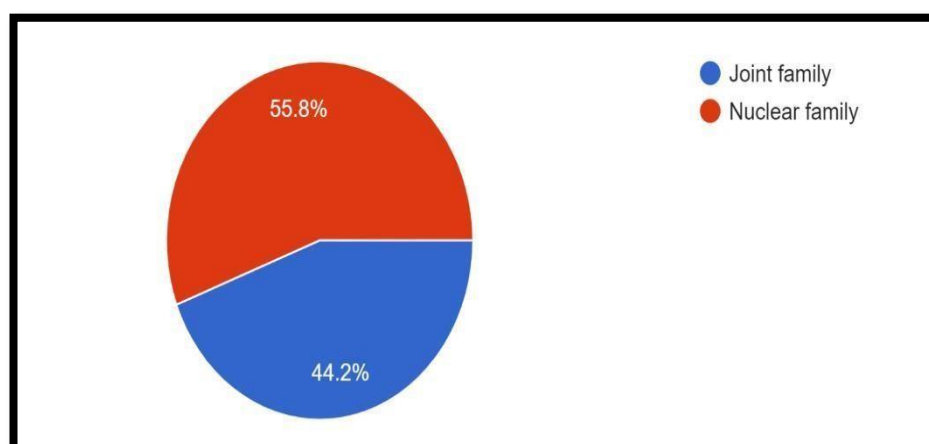

CHART NO: 3.1.5 – TYPES OF FAMILY OF RESPONDENTS.TYPES OF FAMILY PERCENTAGE %

TABLE NO: 3.1.6 – NO OF FAMILY MEMBERS OF RESPONDENTS.

S.no	No. of family members	No. of respondents	Percentage (%)
1.	3	25	20.8
2.	4	58	48.3
3	<4	37	30.8
Total		120	100

Source: Primary Data.

INTERPRETATION

From the above table we came to know that out of 120 respondents, majority of respondents of no of family is 4 (48.3). 30.8 per cent of the respondent are more than 4. 20.8 per cent of respondent are 3.

It is inferred that most of the (48%) of the respondents has.

TABLE NO: 3.1.7 – AREA OF RESPONDENTS.

S.no	Area of respondents	No. of respondents	Percentage (%)
1.	Rural	67	55.8
2.	Urban	39	32.5
3	Semi urban	14	11.7
Total		120	100

Source: Primary Data.

INTERPRETATION

4.2 SUGGESTIONS

- The message delivered by the ads should be made clear so that it can be easily understood by the consumers.
- More ads should present women in powerful roles as it can create a positive brand attitude among the consumers.
- Portraying women in stereotypical or offensive roles in ads should not be encouraged.

CHAPTER V

5.1 CONCLUSION

This study focused on the concept of femvertising and it is understood that femvertising is a marketing strategy used by brands to empower and inspire women through their ads while promoting their products. From this survey we have drawn to the conclusion that women empowerment ads are able to create a positive brand attitude among the consumers. The women participated in the survey agreed that the ads of Hamam, Vanitha and Vim which focused on women empowerment are helpful in making women self-sufficient and also teach about self-defense, self-reliance, women security and gender equality. This study proved that it is not easy to change the mind set of men towards women through these ads. Even though these brands have presented women in powerful and inspiring roles, the purchase decision of most of the consumers do not depend on the way women are portrayed in these ads. As per this survey women are most likely to purchase the product of these brands. So it is inferred that these ads have created a great impact among women. There is no doubt that if more brands include the concept of women empowerment in their promotions, it can create a positive influence among the society.
